Reading the S. K. address this speech is not the "time for the real event to begin." But, unfortunately, it did not, any more than did these words from his inaugural speech reflect the responsibility of the new administration's foreign policy "... mean[ing] has to be born into his mortal hands the power to extermin[ate] the entire species some seven times over" (p. 241)

S.K. draws a picture of a Pres. more determined than any predecessor to have his own way in international relations, heeding the cost, if any, only to his conscience.
